"Perhaps my thought is already clear enough in fundamental spirit and substance to arouse some modest human interest, despite the relatively unknown background of psychology whence it sets forth. In true living experience, an understanding of that realm has never been wholly confined to those who were familiar with any especial terms or technique. Perhaps my thought may even find response from others, more competent than I , to correct its implications or further its possibilities in the several specific fields it touches. If perchance both of these should come to pass I should be greatly encouraged to believe that at my own proper place I had somewhat understandingly reentered the life stream of the Western world into which I was born. If not, I shall accept the responsibility for living to a more clear discernment"--Foreword. (PscINFO Database Record (c) 2009 APA, all rights reserved)
