Monografía

Founder of Liberal Judaism in England, Claude Goldsmid Montefiore wrote extensively on Jewish and Christian theology & ethics. His final book, published in 1938 & co-edited with Herbert Loewe, remains one of the most comprehensive collections available of Rabbinic literature dating from 100 to 500 CE. The edition, which provides historical & lexical context, features two introductions, one from Montefiore espousing a Liberal perspective & the other from Loewe speaking as an Orthodox Jew. Together, they argue for 'a common foundation, a common past, & a common future' linking their outlooks. Their anthology in turn models this co-operation, offering more than 1,600 rabbinical extracts, & covering topics including the nature of God, the Commandments & the Law, prayer & charity. Both a compilation of theological writings & a meditation on theology itself, this work remains a pre-eminent text of Jewish religious scholarship
