Analítica

The aim of the study is to compare how it affects the problem of 'maras' in Spain and El Salvador, and has been used exclusively information obtained from open sources. In the case of Spain, although the phenomenon exists, its characteristics are different both in scope and in the type of organizations present since, without denying the presence of the two main 'maras' Salvatrucha MS-13 and Barrio 18, especially the first, The scope of their actions is different and has been largely neutralized by the action of the Civil Guard, national police and justice. On the other hand, although it existed, Central American immigration in Spain is not comparable to the presence of South Americans, especially Ecuadorians, Colombians, Bolivians, but also Peruvians, Dominicans, Paraguayans, or Argentines, with which the dominant gangs or gangs are And that while they share certain characteristics with the 'maras' , there are also significant differences. Latin gangs, a by-product of emigration since 2000, are especially composed of children and even grandchildren of Latino immigrants, and although the presence of Spaniards of non-Latino origin is demonstrated, it is a minority
