Analítica

n Schengen terminology, the establishment of common external borders and the increase of controls on them are part of the so - called "compensatory measures". They respond to an idea of "compensating" for the absence of internal borders, and consequent free internal movement, with other measures such as a common immigration policy, judicial and police cooperation, etc. It is the origin of the Freedom, Security and Justice Area introduced in the Treaty of Amsterdam. In sum, it is about guaranteeing freedom in a context of security and justice. The present paper tries to analyze the evolution of the regulation of one of the "compensatory mechanisms" of free circulation, FRONTEX, and the causes of successive revisions of its mandate, included the new European Border and Coast Guard (EBCG). Regulation 1624/2016 about EBCG, is provoking an intense debate between the specialists of European Union Law; for some of them the EBCG is a real step towards a common policy on common control of external borders, and for others it is nothing more than "Frontex + ". For this reason, we will try to provide the critical news of the latest regulation for lighting and facilitate the taking of positions
