Analítica

The article analyzes the military recruitment deployed in the western frontier of Buenos Aires from 1852 to 1861, and its impact on rural society. This include the analysis of the conflicts with the Argentina Confederation and the indigenous groups of Pampa and Patagonia; the foundation of the National Guard; and the social resistances to recruitment. The results provide information about the strategies to ensure the monopoly and the use of coercion; the tensions that the local authorities were immersed; and the social responses to the impact of the militia in the frontier society
