Analítica

There are very few papers that explore women's participation in science, but there are even less on the reflection about how they contribute to the development of particular disciplines. In this work, we point out two aspects of the Mexican Political Science field: on the one hand, research carried out with a gender perspective; on the other, the construction of knowledge that women undertake. This is an exploratory and descriptive research that focuses on the Universidad Nacional Autónoma de México (UNAM) during the period of 2010-2020. It analyzes two criteria: 1) published articles in two specialized journals: Revista Mexicana de Ciencias Políticas y Sociales and Revista Estudios Políticos; and 2) genderrelated issues selected by students to obtain their degree in Political Science and Public Administration specialized in Political Science, as well as their master's degree in Social and Political Studies and their doctorate in Social and Political Science oriented towards Political Science. The results on this research show that the impact of feminism, gender perspective and gender studies has an important resonance in the Political Science field. However, hegemonic objects of study remain stable and this field of study, hand in hand with feminist methodologies, is still struggling to break through the discipline
