Analítica

In the section of the Digest concerning -de instructo vel instrumento legato‖ there is a text by Ulpianus that seems on first glance to offer an interesting ius controversum. Determining the contents of instrumenta fundi has depended on a jurisprudential criterion that has been practically unanimous since Sabinus, according to which both agricultural machinery and slaves and animals used for labor in the fields form a part of the -farm implement‖, and therefore of the instrumentum legatum. However, Alfenus Varus distances himself from this criterion in that he excludes all living beings from the catalog of instrumenta fundi. I propose a revised reading of Ulpianus' text, particularly that part which concerns Varus' -supposedly‖ singular doctrine
