Understanding and interpreting the techniques like an element able to transform the way lived by the human being, we consider what was through his implementation that the humanity reached different traineeships of modernization. In specific, treating the rural space, the techniques made possible that the human being, leaving from the condition of hunter - collector, was reaching levels totally different from those tried experienced since the 1st Agricultural Revolution. With the current period of technical-scientificinformational driving the globalization of the capital, the techniques, applied unequally on the rural space, became a decisive element into the production and reproduction of the rural space raising expressive models of agricultural exploration expressive like the Green Revolution. Under the effects of a modernization generated from the capitalist mode of production, in the middle of the decade of 1980 questions under the effects of this model of modernization in the agricultural model they begin to appear inside the thought environmentalist, and, more specifically in the political ecology, questions have been lifted as for the efficiency, and even regarding the validity, of this model of exploration of the rural space
