Analítica

"What do we say when we do not talk?" That is one of the questions we face when talking about silence. Our communicative output is a complex one; it is well known that speaking is just one of our elements of communication, as some others -such as the paralinguistic, kinetics and even silence- are also important. This article focuses on the analysis of silence as an extremely important element to understand any communicative exchange. We shall see which its functions are and we shall study one example where silence does not exactly match stillness, i.e. the movement that affirms what verbal communication denies. The collection of my analysis intends to be a tiny approach to a multidisciplinary communicative focus willing to set up the basis for the studies on non-verbal communication for the Galician-speaking community
