Analítica

The aim of this article is to discuss the changes produced in the last two decades in the Peruvian legal market. It also purports to situate these changes in the broader context of the institutional reforms that are part of the process of globalization. The article provides an assessment of the importance of globalization as a complex phenomenon and of the need to understand the changes in the historic process that informs practices and cultural paths. In this context, the equality deficiency and the exclusion from public institutions' design are elements that have to be reckoned with when it comes to appreciate the importance of the legal practice. Furthermore, it purports to analyze lawyer's activities that aim at reckoning with the requirements of professional demands from international markets and global transactions. The law firms, their organization, their articulation with the global market, and the political implications derived from the activity of these corporations, will be the focus of our discussion and reflections
