Analítica

This article deals with studies in geography through its theoretical and methodological principles, with presentation and discussion directed to study the landscape, grounded in the ways of thinking and new perspectives of study of Geography Traditional; Quantitative Geography; Critical Geography and Human Geography. The methodology consisted of literature search conducted in the office, through literature review and analysis of data collected to obtain information relevant to the topic. As results were found that these different approaches offer referrals to the study of landscape, being connected to the proper development of geography over time, according to new scientific concepts and political ideology. The findings showed that traditional geography analyzes a portion of the concrete space in a quest to search all forms of relationships between and combinations of all the various elements of the landscape in the development of quantitative theories related to the characteristics of distribution and spatial arrangement phenomena, in criticizing the first review of the social processes and not the spatial analysis and also by the modes of production and socioeconomic structures and humanistic landscape is defined as a social organism from the consideration of a subjective space, felt and lived
