text (article)

Analítica

The author insists on the necessity of getting a synthetic vision of the landscape in order to set the basis of a consequent ordenation. So it comes up the possibility of reaching that synthesis within the Physical Geography, which would come out in what we call the 'landscape science '. He emphasizes the historical aspects of the landscape, sometimes of such importance as the hiotical and abiotical aspects. In the last part of this article the general ideas of the author are exposed as far as the landscape ordenation and nature conservation are concerned; the ultraconservatism theories of the romantic movements are underestimated and it is established a more realistic vision before the necessities of the present world. That is the way in which the studies of the integrated landscape gives hetter possibilities of action
