edict 092, 2008, issued by the Constitutional Court, according to state declared unconstitutional decision T-025, 2004, which raises important advances in protecting the rights of women, from a gender gap in our country. Likewise, the edict refers to the internal armed conflict and forced displacement in women. The Constitutional Court based its ruling on international standards and national protection of women and studies presented by international organizations on this issue since the car indicates that the condition of vulnerability in women who are victims of forced displacement not only should be addressed through policy attention, but from the obligation of the Colombian State to understand the complexity of these crimes, and from this create policies to prevent gender-sensitive. Thus the Court ordered implementation within the public policy of comprehensive care for the displaced population, thirteen programs that respond effectively and differential risks faced by women in the context of armed conflict, gender aspects of forced displacement, underlining the gravity of the situations of sexual violence in the armed conflict, and calling attention to the invisibility of this widespread criminal practice
