This paper aims to discuss what means today to have a commitment to the working class and to a free society, taking as base the call of CFESS/Cress for the commemorations of the social assistant day in this year of 2011. It utilizes the social theory of Marx and the historical materialism. It also tries to promote a brief historical revision on the themes of class struggles and social movements in order to debate the challenges faced today by the Social Work in the perspective of the emancipation of the human being
