Analítica

Urban changes must be related to social changes. This statement assumes that the urban transformation processes are phenomena to be considered within the general processes of social transformation. In this way, a specific urban space is an expression of the specific society in which it develops and, at the same time, a basic dimension inseparable from the global processes of organization and social change. Social research on the urban environment has considered this relationship, however, the processes analyzed, and consequently, the dominant concepts and approaches, have varied over the years since this scientific knowledge was institutionalized. Following this scheme, the present text is articulated by four synthetic sections. In the first one, the relationship between urban transformation and social change is reflected. In the second and third, it is done around some of the traditional / new processes and approaches (respectively) in the analysis of urban reality. Finally, in the fourth section, the different contributions that are part of the current issue are presented and detailed
