Analítica

This article addresses the historical process of the main milestones, experiences and decentralizing approaches in Chile between 1810 and 1989. Based on a summary study of the literature on decentralization, territorial planning, local administrations, and recent historiographic perspectives, it seeks to provide a perspective on the approaches with which decentralization in Chile was addressed. In the first instance, a brief conceptual framework is presented including the historical periods in which the document will be divided. Subsequently, will be reviewed the different State projects between 1810 and 1828 then the institutional configuration resulting from the Constitutions of 1833 and 1925, to later analyze the role of the new public institutions such as CORFO and ODEPLAN. Finally, the conclusion will include the main reforms of the dictatorship
