Analítica

Within current trends in cultural and narrative Victimology, the role of direct and indirect victims' narrative testimonies is highlighted considering the limits of scientific knowledge to transmit and understand victims' experiences across time in relation to the social processes of victimisation and reparation. Through the selection of some excerpts of open narratives, as examples of those experiences within and outside Spain, this text explores some parallelisms and differences in the stories of victims of terrorism and victims of other serious crimes, in terms of a critical interpretation of the concepts of epistemic justice and resilience, both understood under a concept of interdisciplinarity
