Analítica

The Sandinista Revolution attracted solidarity from many internationalist groups that joined the Nicaraguan revolutionary process since the insurrectionary stage and during the reconstruction of Nicaragua. Based on oral sources, this article analyzes the experiences of collaboration and integration of militants from the Chilean Revolutionary Left Movement (MIR) with the Sandinista National Liberation Front (FSLN). With this objective, we analyze the networks that allowed their link to the Sandinista process, their insertion in the different periods and spheres of the revolutionary process, and the tensions that these experiences generated within the MIR, in the framework of its anti-dictatorial mobilization strategy
