Analítica

This paper assesses the feasibility of an intersectoral exchange agreement between Australia and Colombia from the framework of sustainable development, comparing the economic indicators provided by the World Bank from the 1990s to the year 2015, in order to determine the viability of An intersectoral exchange. The methodology used, responds to a descriptive documentary research, non-experimental design. For the technique was established the documentary review of the Atlas of Economic Complexity. The importance of synergy between economic factors and sustainable development for intersectoral exchange agreements was determined. Consequently, it is necessary to achieve a sustainability structure by defining sustainable economic indicators of scope between the two countries
