Analítica

The present investigation is to analyze international agreements as a strategic investment in Venezuela. To address this problem we develop two categories such as international agreements and investments, with reference to the theoretical Mora (2011), Hidalgo y Flores (2011), BCV (2011a), Sosa y Ramirez (2007), among others, who believe that international agreements have proven to be a policy that advocates for strategic growth and development of economies, where, where to sign trade agreements with other countries results in capital investments for the revitalization of the Venezuelan economy through the transfer of long-term financial resources from other countries, either as debt or as equity. Under this, the research methodology was developed under a descriptive, qualitative, not experimental, using an interpretative approach, in order to provide guidance for investors to take into account as their products, technology, and can work with the venezuelan economic development.
