Analítica

Latin America is currently witnessing a slowdown in economic and commercial efficiency in the integration of projects since the `90s that are pursuing them as tools for the development of the countries that integrate them. This raises the interest to explore in greater detail the current situation of an economic integration of the region. This article analyzes the issue of integrating countries in the region in light of Albert Hirschman's views, a Latin American who through his studies explored what could be the paths in which these countries should be moving in order to achieve economic development
