Analítica

The objective of the article is to characterize the politics of social control, formal and informal, in the light of the main (multidisciplinary) theoretical developments on the topic. It justified the development of the research an attempt of reflexive approach to events of the contemporary history of Venezuela in the period (2013-2021), which, in order to be explained rationally, must be framed in the contradictions of the legal system, especially regarding the competences derived from the policy of social control. Even more so when the system of government of Nicolás Maduro's regime derives in possible excesses that could systematically blur the adequate use of such control, from a formal perspective. Methodologically, this is a descriptive research structured through the deployment of a phenomenological-hermeneutic methodology. It is concluded that a new category of social control is implemented based on the use of massive technological tools such as the Internet and social networks, which, when are used by state bodies do not change the nature of social control since the fact that the agent that holds power is the State prevails, therefore it is pertinent to advise that it would be a formal and sometimes invisible social control
