Parishes are communities of people sheltering had multiple origins, both in geography and the neighborhood, in the identity of economic activity (which usually amounted field of agriculture), as well as in legal status, since all its components were subject to the same public and private law, and lived within a political and administrative framework. Of course, they could also have their origin in religion, in faith and its structures as well as in the tradition, culture and mentality, beliefs, customs and shared values. All these common elements were not mutually exclusive, but complementary, as many of them existed at the time
