Analítica

Sexual harassment is a current topic, not because it did not exist before, but because of its present visibility, identification and judicial protection, as a consequence of the feminists theorizations that took place during the seventies in the United States of America. The theorization reached Europe, and in 1989 and it was legally established in Spain. At present, Spanish Law has criminal, working and administrative regulations for the purpose of protecting the victims of sexual harassment. The approval of the Istanbul Convention within the Council of Europe (2011) and, in the global framework of the General Recommendation 35 of CEDAW (2017) and the 190 Convention of ILO (2019) necessitates its study aimed at verifying if Spanish Law is in line with the standards of these international instruments
