

Historia y arquitectura: apuntes para un debate [

Analítica

In general, architects seem not to think that the history of architecture holds essential knowledge that will help them understand their professional responsibility. One of the reasons for this is that, in academia, there seems to be no clarity about the meaning of the role history has to play. This article asks questions about the history of architecture's object of study and make contributions to the critical debate on the way in which, from an architectural perspective, historical research external to the fundamental concepts of historical science and history is framed. This creates conceptual voids that discourage being interest in the value it offers
