Analítica

The aim of this article is to study a passage of the Mozarabic Chronicle of 754, known as the lamentation for the 'Loss of Spain'. It researches about the meaning of it and the fact that breaks the 'chronistic' structure and style, besides the historical view that underlies it. Moreover, it explores the relationship between the mourn and the thesis about providentialism, the arabs and divine punishment. The paper suggests to consider this passage in relation whit the whole work, the characteristics of the chronicle genre and the culture of his author. Finally, proposes that the 'Loss of Spain' has to be understood as a confluence of two tendencies: a providential interpretation of the Arab invasion and a Hispanic sense of identity. These tendencies make the author break the structure and style of his own work in order to introduce a lamentation that reminiscence the 'tragic' invasion of the year 711
