Analítica

The political theory of Ernesto Laclau has generated several debates in the academic left. The label of Post-Marxism to his theory originated discussions about his relationship with Marx and the presence of the Marxist legacy in his work. In this matter one of the proposals of post-Marxism is abandoning dialectics. For Laclau, the Hegelian dialectic is guilty of introducing the logic of necessity in Marxism. This impedes analysis of contingency in history. This article studies Laclau's reading of Hegelian dialectic in different works and analyzes his writings on the notions of determination, negativity and contingency. A review of these concepts can restore an adequate concept of dialectic non-deterministic for the postfundational political thought
