Analítica

Libya and Tunisia are the countries that first initiated the revolts of the Ar-abic Spring, though in the first one of these countries it was done in a vi-olent way, whereas in the second one it was done of a much more pacific form. Nevertheless, in both the final result was the same: the overthrow of the existing regime and its substitution for a new one. Nevertheless, the process of change has since developed in a very different way in both countries. Libya can be considered a state that submerges increasingly into the anarchy. On the contrary in Tunisia, the political process has end-ed in the approval of an ambitious constitution that can turn into a model for the whole region. Anyway, both countries are submitted to important internal and security challenges they will have to answer in the coming future
