Analítica

Violence against women in the context of a partner is a serious structural social problem that has persisted over time and involves profound human rights violations. To reveal the different ways in which violence manifests itself within relationships, 1,168 sentences were collected in 41 WC of a university institution. These manifestations were classified qualitatively according to the different types of violence (physical, psychological, sexual and economic) and through a critical and hermeneutic analysis of the postulates from the Gender Perspective and the Rights Perspective it was possible to find that an intimate partner violence is based on gender stereotypes, hidden behind various forms, and is justified by hetero-patriarchal cultural patterns and is deeply rooted and normalized within the culture to the extent that human rights expressly protected by law are violated
