The present work addresses a study based on the different research techniques on the planning of municipal decentralized autonomous governments, based on the constitutional mandates established in the Magna Carta of Ecuador that has been in force since 2008, approved by a Constituent Assembly with the beginning . of the period of former president Rafael Correa Delgado, also of its territorial organization, which are the competencies of the municipalities, powers and attributions arising through decentralization or also called division of powers that with the 2008 constitution an attempt has been made to remove the power of the center and divide it through its territorial constituencies such as: regions, provinces, cantons, parishes, among others. The GAD, with their basic structure, have a system of citizen participation that is regulated by regulatory act, to prepare development and territorial planning plans (PDOT), and formulate local public policies. Thus, citizen participation at this level of government is called to play a highly relevant role, among other matters, in the definition of local public policies, to guide the effective exercise of the rights enshrined in the Constitution of the Republic in pursuit of . to achieve a more organized society, with a culture of respect for compliance with the current legal framework and in observance of the principles of democracy and solidarity. For this, the methodology required was the use of a descriptive and qualitative research in which the in-depth explanation of the phenomenon and the problem has been established in the most complete way possible, obtaining the results through documentary observation and as a conclusion, of course. that decentralization and the ethics of a government benefit not only each territory of Ecuador, but an entire country
