Analítica

A group of terms with a Neoplatonic origin has developed in Islamic philosophy. The Arabic translations of the texts of Euclid's Elements (Arabic Al-Usul liIqlidis) and Plotinus' Enneads (Arabic Ut#x331;ulugiya) were instrumental in this. In the translation of these works, the terms al-ustuqus, al-inniyya and al-basit were used. From these foundational texts, these terms had an imprint on the philosophical thought of several authors in the Islamic context. In the specific case of al-basit, being a term of great polyvalence, its conceptualisation contributed to the development of novel ideas in the fields of ontology, epistemology, mathematics and natural sciences in Islamic thinkers, with the Persian philosopher Mulla Sadra (1571- 1635) being the most notable case. The article describes the diachrony of the term al-basit in the fields of philosophy and geometry in the Islamic context and its Neoplatonic background in authors such as Mulla Sadra
