This research approaches the problem, as an object of investigation, that exists in the case of the Mexican Criminal Federal Code to consider drug trafficking exclusively as a national crime, and the implications that come with those criminal actions that cross the territorial borders of the countries and make nugatory the punitive power of the Mexican State to persecute and sanction these kind of criminal behaviours. This situation forces the Mexican authorities to find solutions to stop these conducts that cross the territorial borders of Mexico; therefore, the hypothesis of this research is to consider the crime of drug trafficking, as well as national, as an international crime and to allow the competence of the International Criminal Court to investigate and punish those grave criminal conducts that threaten international security
