Analítica

This text aims to depict the effects attained to the indigenous malice argument inclusion into the multiculturalism context in Colombia. This article analyses the tension between the politics of recognition defended by core multiculturalism discourses and the distrust canon that had shaped constitutional interpretation regarding indigenous rightsadjudication. the first section of the text deals with the expression of such recognition politics into the constitutional regime. From a normative perspective, this section argues that recognition and trust should shape the frame for institutional development of multicultural rights. The second section of the text focuses on the inclusion of Indigenous Malice argument into the local legal sociology discourse and its expression in the not law-abiding subject as a cultural issue. The effects of such a discourse, with creates a relation shaped by distrust, into the indigenius victims of the armed conflict are analizedin the final section of this article
