Analítica

This study delves into the military tents utilized during the Tunis (1535) and Algiers (1541) campaigns, drawing primarily from documentation housed at the Archivo General de Simancas. Notably, this documentation, which particularly focuses on the latter campaign, contains a description accompanied by an unpublished sketch by Jerónimo de Orlando, who oversaw Charles V's pavilions and tents. By analyzing the design and comparing correspondence with expense records, we are able to gain insight into the materials, colors, and motifs employed in their construction.
