Analítica

The institutionalization of evaluation of policies, programs and projects plays an important role providing information for the improvement of public management. Evaluation processes prevent and mitigate problems that require a relevant, effective and sustainable intervention of public authorities. This research sought to determine the status of the institutionalization of the evaluation in Ecuador, during 2014-2017. The normative analysis of the Ecuadorian Constitution shows the evaluation as a principle that governs Public Administration. There is a national normative with evaluation criteria; however, it is not oriented towards a programmatic or impact evaluation, it is not autonomous, it lacks of quality standards and funding sources. Its use is restricted to those who decide the planning, direction and legitimization of programs and projects of public interest. According to the qualitative analysis, civil society does not participate or demand evaluations, except for certain civil society organizations. There are also no comprehensive professional training programs and certification of professional skills under evaluation
