Analítica

In Uruguay, since the 1910s, the batllismo of the Colorado Party had a harsh confrontation with ruralismo, a common expression to designate the agrarian businessmen's unions with a strong influence in conservative sectors of the majority parties. The purpose of this article is to analyze the confrontations between these two cardinal expressions of Uruguayan politics during 1943. In order to meet the objectives, different political expressions on land ownership are presented from different sources, including public administration documents, conferences, bills and expressions in the press. The results allow us to understand some common features in the confrontation over land ownership during the Uruguayan twentieth century
