Analítica

In Ecuador there is a contradiction regarding constitutional control. On the one hand, control is concentrated and the Constitutional Court is the only one that can interpret the Constitution; while from the same constitutional text it follows that all public authorities must directly and immediately apply the supreme norm. From this perspective, the general objective is to analyze in a doctrinal and legal manner the mixed control of constitutionality in Ecuador, for which a qualitative methodology is used, which allows describing the characteristics of the study problem, as well as Through the dogmatic method that deals with the study of doctrine and the exegetical method that focuses its study on legal norms, the proposed objective can be achieved. Concluding that, in Ecuador, the only control endorsed by the supreme standard is the concentrate; However, the application of rights constitutes a first filter granted to all public administrative or judicial authorities to evidence possible unconstitutionality
