Analítica

Medieval rural communities in Castile and Leon were socially unequal communities as a consequence of legal, economic-patrimonial factors, and others related to position in the hierarchy and feudal society. This paper examines the concessions obtained through documented agreements in the Castilian-Leonese area that allowed certain dependents to either free themselves or reduce the labour rent required of them. It is proposed that this type of agreement helped reinforce the social and economic position of those who were favored as the mitigation of feudal rent would allow greater availability of the household's labour force while symbolically manifesting distinction by exempting themselves from the services that highlighted social inferiority, the labour services
